Oil paintings of figures turned away, and the pull between home and the road.

Artist statement

2026

I trained as a screenwriter before I painted, and I still think in scenes. A painting, for me, is the moment just before or just after something happens.

I build each picture on the tension between warm and cold, between the calm of home and the urge to leave it. My figures usually turn away. I would rather you stand where they stand than look at their faces.

The work grows one painting at a time, like a diary of looking for a place of my own.
